RUNWAY EDITION

PROJECT RUNWAY

Last Thursday was the second episode of the eleventh season of the popular fashion design show Project Runway.

Project Runway is a reality TV show hosted by super model Heidi Klum. This TV show pits top designers against each other for the ultimate prize of being considered one of the best in the industry.

Each week the designers are tasked with making a piece or multiple pieces. If what they have made is the worst, they risk being eliminated.

This season added a major twist. Each week is a team challenge. Only the worst on the losing team can be eliminated.

The first episode split the designers into the teams "Dream Team" and "Keeping It Real." They were then tasked with creating New York inspired garments.

The "Dream Team" lost and Emily Pollard, a new and inexperienced designer, was sent home. The winner was Daniel Esquivel, a man with a mustache any man would be envious of.

The second episode brought on Susan Sarandon and tasked the teams with creating new outfits for servers and ball-boys at her Ping-Pong social club.

The "Dream Team" lost again and this time James Martinez, a long time high end stylist, was told aufidersen. The winner was Layana Aguilar, a Brazilian who has been designing ever since she was a child.

WONDERLAND: FALLEN BY LEWIS HEART

As the bus slowed to a halt, the bustle of Alice and the other students grabbing their bags commenced.

Except for one, she noticed. The strange boy that had sat in her spot. She said, "Come on. We have class." He did not respond. She nudged him but again no response.

Not wanting to be late herself, she left him sitting there in his stupor.

As the day marched on, and as Alice went from class to class, she could not stop thinking about the strange boy.

When the bell rang signaling the end of school, Alice ran to the bus and jumped on. She was disappointed to find that the boy was gone.

Once home, she went through her daily routine of cleaning, dinner, homework, television, and reading. However, her usual routine did not have her typical cheery attitude.

After sleeping and going through her morning routine again, Alice got on to the bus and found the boy in her spot again.

She tried to get the boy to move again. And for the next week or so, she continued to follow this new routine.

On the seventh day, she mustered up all her strength and shoved him. And then everything seemed to slow down. The boy was knocked off the seat towards the floor. Her peers and the driver turned their heads. She apologized profusely.

And then time went back to normal. She realized that the boy had fallen but was still not moving. While she was puzzling over this new development, she noticed something else by his leg. Something red.

VALENTINE'S DAY

Valentine's Day is just over a week away! So you're probably looking for ideas of what to do for your loved ones, be them friends, family, or a significant other.

So here are a few ideas.

Buy their favorite flower in their favorite color.

Take them to a restaurant with their favorite food.

Make them their favorite dessert.

Make them a card that says something only the two of you understand.

Give them a hug.

Make them a playlist of their favorite songs.

Tell them just how much you love them.

Character of the Week

ESHA

I'm a first year med student who is especially passionate about: global health, cycling, dancing, witty conversation, meditation, Ted talks, and literature. I've recently taken up rock climbing, which I love. My projects for next month involve helping start a women's Refugee clinic, becoming more proficient in Hindi, and playing the violin while waiting for my laundry. The rest you'll have to find out by stopping by and meeting me - I really love meeting new people, so drop by KC326 any-time. Added incentive - I keep chai tea and biscotti (dark chocolate covered, of course) in my room at all times, as emergency provisions.
